BOOK PRODUCTION IN 1908

BOOK PRODUCTION IN 1908

IN THE UNITED STATES

THE book production of the United States during 1908, judged by the number of titles recorded in THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, showed a slight decrease, compared with the figures of 1907, the most active year in the publishing business yet known. The difference is not sufficiently great to impair the credit claimed for 1908 as being fully up to 1907 in activity and enterprise in the output of books. In 1908 we recorded 9254 titles through our "Weekly Record of New Publications"—of which 8745 were new books and 509 new editions, against 9620 of 1907, of which 8925 were new books and 695 new editions—the loss to 1908 being 366 titles.

The figures of our tables possess an unusual interest. In the first table the enormous increase in works of fiction, and the losses in almost every other class of literature, plainly indicate the tendency of the day. Fiction takes the lead, as it has for a number of years, with 1489 books to its credit, being 318 more novels than before published in any one year. The classification of theology and religion follows, holding its place with a tenacity from which it is not easy to dislodge it. This year it is smaller in point of numbers than in 1907, showing a loss of 60 books.

Poetry and the drama, which has gone up to the fourth place in our table from the fifth, shows a loss of 75 books. Literature and collected works, always a prolific class, lacks 29 titles to make it equal to 1907 in numbers. It takes a higher place in our table, having risen from the eighth place to the fifth. Biography and correspondence shows a loss of 75 books. There were 142 less juvenile works issued than in 1907. Description, geography and travel shows a loss of 67 books, education a loss of 90 books. Fine arts and illustrated works, which in 1907 made so fine a showing, had 82 less books to its credit in 1908. Excepting an increase of 28 books under political and social science, and of 8 books under history, there is but little further to record of importance in the other classifications. Out of the whole total of 9254 books recorded only 3749 were received at this office. The balance represents new editions of works; publications imported in very limited number and not sent for review; titles reported by publishers unaccompanied by books; titles taken from the accession cards supplied by the Library of Congress and titles gleaned by every means available at the price of eternal vigilance.

Our Table No. 1 illustrates these facts very clearly, and gives the figures of 1907 for comparison with those of 1908.

Table No. 2 attempts to show the number of books manufactured in the United States in 1908—first, those by American authors; second, those by English or other foreign authors made in this country according to the demands of the copyright law, and third, the books in English, imported bound or in sheets, these three classes comprising the output of books of the United States in 1908. The first and second classes are almost all copyright books. This table, like the former, scarcely claims to be precise in its division, as it is impossible always to trace the history of a work, from its author to its final publication. The table shows 6349 books by American authors against 6517 of 1907; 1145 books by English or other foreign authors (made here) against 1319 of 1907, and 1760 books or sheets imported, against 1784 of 1907. The reprints were, as usual, the largest in fiction, amounting to 456, far less, however, than in several previous years, when almost double that number of English or other foreign novels were reprinted. The most evident fact demonstrated by this table is the great number of books by American authors published in 1908 in all classes of literature. A second fact more observable than in several past years, is the few reprints of English works in comparison with the importations, which cannot be accounted for by the increased activity of the year.

Meantime, however, of the copyright business for 1909, all titles filed on January 2, 1909, have been classified, stamped and numbered, to the number of 4237. All the entries in Classes B, F and G. of this date have been indexed, as have also the certificate entries in Classes D, E and H.

IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

BELGIUM. 1907.

La Belgique Artistique et Littéraire in its issue for March, 1908, gives the total amount of the literary production of Belgium for 1907 as 2107 works. This amount is 303 less than in 1906 and 517 less than in 1905.

ENGLAND. 1908.

THE London Publishers' Circular, in presenting the statistics of book production in England during 1908, says that "like most businesses, publishing suffered a slight depression during the past year, though it is still well above any year previous to 1907. The total number of new books recorded as published in 1908 is 9821, a decrease of 93 as compared with 1907. This decrease is inconsiderable, but on analysing the figures it will be seen that there also has been a fall in the average class of book published. Thus in new books (as opposed to new editions) there has been a decrease of 189 during the year, while there has been an increase of 96 in new editions. That is to say, a considerably greater proportion of cheap reprints have appeared. This has been the case especially in fiction, religion and philosophy, and political and social economy; and an example is afforded by the fiction published during July, when 177 books were issued, of which 88, or practically 50 per cent., were new editions. Taking the year's output class by class there are the following decreases: Religion, 28; educational, 60; political and social, 92; history, 13; year books, 24; medicine, 32; and belles-lettres, 79; while there are increases in the following classes: Fiction, 5; law, 17; arts and sciences, 55; voyages, 49; poetry, 42; and miscellaneous, 67. The information to hand seems to indicate an increased output during the coming year, the figures for December, 1908, showing an increase of 26 per cent. over the previous year, and no doubt the total for the year 1909 will run into five figures."

The analytical table, as divided into classes, makes the following showing:

FRANCE. 1908.

The book production in France during the year 1908, as recorded by the Bibliographie de la France, was 11,073, or 288 more than in 1907. The number of musical compositions recorded in 1908 was 7648, or 117 less than in 1907; and the number of engravings, lithographs and photographs registered in 1908 was 468, or 364 less than were registered in 1907 and 586 less than in 1906.

The difference in the records of the Bibliographie de la France, which records all printed matter reported to the book trade and those of the Bureau of the Ministry of the Interior, which in its records takes notice of only the more stable element in the French book production, amount to 2275 titles.

THE following statistics of new books published in Italy in 1907-1908 have been compiled by the Bollettino delle Pubblicazioni Italiane:

	1907

There were published during 1907. 416 new editions and 277 periodicals; in 1908, 416 new editions and 332 new periodicals.

THE NETHERLANDS. 1907.

THE literary output of the Netherlands for 1907 is computed at 3408 works, which corresponds very closely with that of 1904, the highwater mark in ten years. These figures are taken from the titles quoted in the "Table des Matiquès Scientifiques," the first part of Brinkman's "Alphabetische Lijst van Boeken, Landkarten," etc., published by A. W. Sijthoff, at Leyden. They include also the reprints, pamphlets and translations. The increase is specially noticeable in the departments of theology, geography, fine arts and theatre, while novels and romance have sensibly decreased. In no other country do the figures show such stability and accuracy.

RUSSIA. 1907.

ACCORDING to the Bureau de la Presse of St. Petersburg, the book production of 1907 amounted to 9607 works, of which 7271 were written in Russian, 786 in Polish, 304 in German, 253 in Lettish, 235 in Esthonian, 199 in Hebrew, 144 in Tartar, 104 in Armenian, 53 in Lithuanian, 45 in French, 26 in Georgian, 24 in Arabian, etc.

SWITZERLAND. 1907.

THE records of the National Library show the book production of Switzerland, during 1907, to have been 3085 books, 6100 pamphlets, 1519 leaflets, 311 maps and charts and 684 views, portraits and plates. The table includes as volumes every publication numbering upward of 100 pages; as pamphlets, all publications from 4 to 100 pages, which also include society publications, publications of universities and reports of experts and about 700 reviews and journals, each counted as a volume.

URUGUAY. 1902-1906.

L'Annuario Estadístico, covering the years 1904-1906, published at Montevideo in 1908, includes the list of works published from 1902 to 1906, entered under authors. The totals are as follows: 1902, 107; 1903, 81; 1904, 54; 1905, 176; 1906, 110. This bibliography includes publications of every class, reports, statutes, public documents, musical compositions, educational text-books and new editions.

The following is one way of estimating the relative popularity of various novels of 1908:

Six Times Mentioned.

The Shuttle.

Five Times Mentioned.

The Weavers, The Lady of the Decoration, The Barrier, Mr. Crewe's Career.

Three Times Mentioned.

The Black Bag, The Coast of Chance, The Lure of the Mask.

Twice Mentioned.

The Daughter of Anderson Crow, The Ancient Law, Somehow Good, Old Wives for New, The Husbands of Edith, Halfway House, The Firing Line, Together, The Man from Brodney's, The Little Brown Jug at Kildare, Peter.

Once Mentioned.

The Fruit of the Tree, Satan Sanderson, Days Off, The Old Peabody Pew, Three Weeks, Rosalind at Red Gate, The Great Secret, The Fair Moon of Bath, The Primadonna, Rose MacLeod, The Chaperon, The Wayfarers, The Post Girl, The Circular Staircase, Lewis Rand, The Testing of Diana Mallory, The Trail of the Lonesome Pine.

In the lists for 1908 there were represented a greater number of books than in any other years since we began compiling these tables. There were thirty-six titles as against thirty in 1907, thirty in 1906, twenty-nine in 1905, thirty-one in 1904, thirty-two in 1903, twenty-eight in 1901, and twenty-nine in 1900. On account of two of the books being the result of collaboration the thirty-six titles represent thirty-eight authors. Of these twenty-two are men and sixteen women, a much more even division than in 1907, when the figures were twenty-five to seven. In comparing the American popularity of English and American books we are leaving out entirely Sir Gilbert Farker, Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett and Mrs. Williamson. Of the remaining thirty-five, twenty-eight are American and seven English.

THE AUTHORS' FULL DINNER PAIL.

WE extract the following interesting facts from an article by Arthur Bartlett Maurice in the January issue of The Bookman:

... While the general recognition of the vast profits to be won by successful authorship has been a matter of the last ten or fifteen years, one need only think of the stately edifice which Sir Walter Scott erected on the banks of the Tweed to realize that the great rewards of authorship have not been confined exclusively to the present day. To have erected and maintained Abbotsford would have required a fortune many times greater than the author could possibly have earned as a barrister in the Scottish courts. At a time when the purchasing power of money was far greater than it is at present Scott was in the habit of receiving eight thousand pounds for a single volume. Not only by his pen was he able to support a kind of court, but his surplus profits were so large that he was tempted to plunge heavily into outside speculation. Great as the resulting disaster was, he retrieved it by literary labor alone. It is a matter of record that between January, 1826, and January, 1828, he earned for his creditors nearly forty thousand pounds. ...

Dickens was a man of extravagant, though not wildly reckless habits in money matters, and yet his estate at his death amounted in round numbers to one hundred thousand pounds. His total earnings during the thirty odd years of his successful literary work must have reached nearly three times that sum. In the years before the publication of Vanity Fair, when he was little better than a literary hack of high order contributing to Fraser's, Punch and various London daily papers, Thackeray used to speak with a certain peevish envy of Dickens "making his ten thousand pounds a year." Although Thackeray never made anything like the money from his pen that his great contemporary did—the period when he could command high prices covering only about sixteen years—he was able to live handsomely, to frivel many valuable days at Richmond or Greenwich, to build himself a fine house, and to leave to his children an estate equal in amount of the estate that he himself had inherited and wasted in his younger days.

After he retired from the editorship of the Cornhill Magazine Thackeray was paid one hundred guineas apiece for the little two- or three-page essays which were afterward collected as the Roundabout Papers. When we consider the great distinction of the book in question, there is a pathetic note in the fact that Thackeray expressed himself as being delighted because his publishers agreed to pay him one thousand pounds outright for the history of Henry Esmond. Imagine the attitude that would be taken by Hall Caine or Miss Marie Corelli if a similar offer were to be made to them for one of their books to-day.

There is an old story to the effect that a certain man in a small English town stumbled upon the information that Rudyard Kipling was being paid for his work at the rate of a shilling a word. The man, who was of a waggish turn of mind, sat down and wrote to the author enclosing a money-order for a shilling and asking for a sample of his wares. As the order was accompanied by a stamped and addressed envelope Mr. Kipling complied with the request by sending back, written on a piece of paper, the word "Thanks." But Kipling as a literary property, as a constant winner of money by his pen, is probably far too highly appraised in the general mind. He is by no means the millionaire that he is thought to be, although unquestionably he has builded up a comfortable fortune. Of course nowadays he is paid the very highest prices for everything that he cares to write. It has been said that for the serial rights in England and in this country of "Kim" his agent asked and received five thousand pounds. Any magazine would probably jump at the chance to pay him a thousand pounds for a short story. The story itself might not be worth that, and it might not attract to the magazine a thousand additional readers, but considered in the light of advertising it would be money well invested. ...

Speaking in an arbitrary sense one may say that the vogue of the "big seller," as it is understood to-day, began with Mr. du Maurier's "Trilby." Although that book was the first novel which the eminent and later middle-aged artist had planned to write, it was temporarily laid aside, and "Peter Ibbetson" produced in its stead. That admirable tale, though it won the frank admiration of the discriminating few, was not, from the monetary point of view, a decided success. When he completed "Trilby," which he had first outlined in a conversation with Henry James, who had urged him to write it, Du Maurier considered the offer of two thousand pounds for the rights outright made to him by the American publishers, a bit of generosity that bordered on madness. When "Trilby" had taken England and America by storm, and the names of Svengali, Little Billie, Taffy, and the Laird were on the lips of every one, the publishers tore up the original contract, and paid Mr. Du Maurier on a royalty basis. For his last work, "The Martian," Du Maurier was paid the sum of fifty thousand dollars. The book enjoyed only a small fraction of the popularity of "Trilby" and the publishers were lucky if the investment did not prove a losing venture.

Among the literary money earners of today Sir Arthur Conan Doyle will be found, if not at the apex, at least very near it. For his first story, "The Mystery of Sasassa Valley," written when he was an undergraduate at the University of Edinburgh, he received fifteen dollars. For the last series of tales dealing with Sherlock Holmes he was paid, when the American serial rights, the English serial rights and the book rights are taken into consideration, at the rate of over two dollars a word. For the serial rights of "Sir Nigel," a sequel to "The White Company," and vastly inferior, he received twenty-five thousand dollars. It has been said that it is from a man's worst work that he earns his money, and that his best goes only to the building of his reputation. This is a very broad statement, yet in the case of Conan Doyle it is worth while remembering that for "The Study in Scarlet," which was the first and one of the best of the Sherlock Holmes stories, and was almost forty thousand words in length, he was paid the sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars. At that time he was obliged to peddle it about from magazine to magazine before finding a purchaser. . . .

In the matter of earning capacity, in the front rank of contemporary British writers of fiction are Hall Caine and Marie Corelli. It would be quite superfluous to say anything about the castle of the former in the Isle of Man, or the home of the latter at Stratford-on-Avon. Miss Corelli enjoys the distinction of having been paid the highest percentage of royalty ever received by an author. One English publisher is said to have obtained a recent novel from her by consenting to share with her on what may be technically be termed a thirty-three and a third per cent. basis. One of the most consistent of literary money winners has been Mrs. Humphry Ward. Her profits from "The Marriage of William Ashe," "Lady Rose's Daughter," "Eleanor," "Marcella," "The History of David Grieve," and "Sir George Tressady" have averaged at a rough estimate fifty thousand dollars a book. Her most widely discussed novel, "Robert Elsmere," appeared before the days of international copyright, and in consequence was not a great money winner. The author derived no benefit from the enormous sale which the book had in America.

A strong though recent contender in the race for the spoils of authorship is Katharine Cecil Thurston. In America alone "The Masquerader" is said to have sold two hundred thousand copies. That means that her American publishers paid her from forty to sixty thousand dollars according to the percentage of royalty stipulated in her contract. Contrast this with the fate of a book which in its day enjoyed an even greater vogue. Miss Beatrice Harraden sold the English rights of "Ships That Pass in the Night" outright for twenty pounds. In America the story was published by half a dozen different houses, only one of which made any payment to the author. Maurice Hewlett and Anthony Hope Hawkins, especially the latter, earn handsome incomes from their books; but George Meredith and Thomas Hardy, despite the eminent positions which they hold in the world of letters, have been far out-distanced by Mr. Caine and Miss Corelli in the matter of pounds, shillings and pence.

Present literary conditions are very different from what literary conditions were in the days when Edgar Allan Poe was satisfied to receive a five dollar bill for one of the best of his grotesque tales. To avoid any appearance of lèse majesté, let us begin with the President. It is only a few months ago that the newspapers were full of various extraordinary stories on this score. Sagamore Hill, Oyster Bay, was represented as being violently besieged by a troop of magazine editors and publishers, who, fired by competition, were bidding one dollar a word, one dollar and a half a word, two dollars a word, and even beyond, for anything that the President would write. It was said that one publishing firm had made Mr. Roosevelt a flat offer of one hundred thousand dollars for a book about his forthcoming visit to Europe; and that another publishing house had bid fifty thousand dollars for a book on sports and hunting. While the present writer is not going to discuss these offers, real or alleged, there is no question about the President, with his exalted position, and his dominating personality, having a really high literary value. At that, as a literary property pure and simple, he is very far behind Winston Churchill. Once upon a time an industrious person of a statistical turn of mind figured that four thousand spruce trees had to be cut down in order that "Richard Carvel" might be printed. From the story as a book and from the royalties accruing from its dramatization "Richard Carvel" yielded Mr. Churchill over three hundred thousand dollars. That book was the greatest individual money winner. Yet not so far behind have been "The Crisis," "Coniston" and "Mr. Crewe's Career."

A very charming story that deserves a little paragraph by itself when discussing the subject of this article is Booth Tarkington's "Monsieur Beaucaire." In one way it ranks among the greatest of all money winners.

As a book it sold not far from a hundred thousand copies in the form in which it was first published, and perhaps fifty thousand copies in a subsequent cheaper edition. Yet its total length was only about eleven thousand words, not much more than the length of a short story, and the profits, when estimated by the "price per word" take on an astonishing aspect. One of the steadiest and most consistent of present day money winners among American novelists is George Barr McCutcheon. It is unusual when a book of his does not reach a sale of one hundred thousand copies, and the list of his successes includes "Beverly of Graustark," "Nedra," "The Daughter of Anderson Crow," "Jane Cable," "Brewster's Millions," and "The Man from Brodney's." In addition "Brewster's Millions" yielded its author the profits that come from a successful play. In six years his novels have sold more than a million and a quarter copies. Fate has made very generous compensation to Mr. McCutcheon for an early literary indiscretion. He sold the copyright of "Graustark," his first book, outright for five hundred dollars. "Graustark" has attained a sale of more than four hundred thousand copies.

In the same class with "Graustark" and "Ships That Pass in the Night" must be mentioned Florence Morse Kingsley's "Titus," which is said to have sold a million copies. Mrs. Kingsley's reward from "Titus" was one thousand dollars. The story was written for a prize contest, one of the conditions being that the winning author should relinquish all claims to royalty.

A case similar to that of Sir Walter Scott is that of Mark Twain. In 1894 when the humorist was almost sixty years of age, the firm of Webster & Company, of which he was president, made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors, acknowledging liabilities approximating eighty thousand dollars. Within less than ten years Mark Twain was able to pay off all this debt, and to build for himself a handsome new fortune in addition. On the other hand William Dean Howells, who has done so much for the dignity of the American novel, has won what may be regarded only as a comfortable competence. F. Hopkinson Smith has unquestionably found literature fully as remunerative as his other professions of painting and engineering. Although we are inclined to think of him as still being a young man, for fully a quarter of a century F. Marion Crawford has been holding his public and winning a fine income by his pen. He is a rapid and indefatigable worker and the list of his novels now numbers about forty. His literary earnings cannot have been less than five hundred thousand dollars.

Of a younger generation are Richard Harding Davis and Robert W. Chambers. For the past four or five years Mr. Davis has devoted most of his time to the writing of plays. His profits from this source belong to the province of another article. There was a period when his earnings strictly as an author, from his short stories, his descriptive articles, and the royalties from his books were estimated at twenty-five thousand dollars a year. Just at present, as a literary property, Robert W. Chambers has a value second only to the value of Winston Churchill. It is no indiscretion to say that he is probably among the men and women who command a twenty per cent. royalty and in consequence receives thirty cents for each copy that is sold. Others of this patrician class are Winston Churchill, James Lane Allen, Marion Crawford, John Fox, Richard Harding Davis, F. Hopkinson Smith, Booth Tarkington, Thomas Dixon, George Barr McCutcheon, Alice Hegan Rice, and Kate Douglas Wiggin among Americans. Among English writers deriving the same returns from the American market are Conan Doyle, Rudyard Kipling, Anthony Hope, Mrs. Humphry Ward, Katharine Cecil Thurston and Marie Corelli. The sales of some of Mr. Chambers's recent books, such as "The Fighting Chance" and "The Younger Set," have been advertised as reaching two hundred thousand copies.

Thomas Dixon's royalties from "The Leopard's Spots" amounted to sixty thousand dollars; from "The Clansman" forty thousand dollars and from "The One Woman" almost twenty thousand dollars. "The Clansman" as a play has brought Mr. Dixon ninety thousand dollars in royalty, and as he is also part owner in the production, it has earned for him in addition one hundred and fifteen thousand dollars—making a sum total of over three hundred thousand dollars. A few years ago a newspaper story was printed to the effect that Alice Hegan Rice had formed a private banking company in Louisville. If the report was true Mrs. Rice enjoys the distinction of being probably the only woman banker among literary people. At any rate it was far from being impossible, for "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" sold almost a million copies and "Lovey Mary" proved a very substantial successor. Other American women who have reaped large rewards from the products of their pens are Mary Wilkins Freeman, Mrs. Wharton, Ellen Glasgow, Frances Hodgson Burnett, (we shall always insist on regarding Mrs. Burnett as an American woman,) and Kate Douglas Wiggin. With "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" Kate Douglas Wiggin joined the ranks of those writers who have won a small fortune with a single book.

While to win one of the big prizes in the lottery of authorship it is necessary to make a decided hit with a novel that is being published on a royalty basis, the short story field is one in which the author may reap very substantial rewards. Indeed in many cases the short story is found to be the most reliable source of income. There are instances, for example, where a writer has strung together ten or a dozen short stories which have appeared in periodicals and brought them out as a book which has attained only a moderate degree of success. For the stories' as they appeared originally he was paid, let us say, on an average of two hundred dollars apiece. On the other hand, at the end of the first twelve months, the book having sold only fifteen or eighteen hundred copies, his returns from royalty have amounted to little more than the price of a single story.

As a general statement it is safe to say that never have the prices paid for short stories been so high as they have been during the last five or six years. Five thousand dollars for a five thousand-word story was the result of a prize competition of three or four years ago. That, of course, was an exceptional case, but the periodical which conducted the competition has a minimum rate of five cents a word which it pays for its fiction, and where the author happens to be one of strong-established reputation the scale is sometimes twice or three times as high. Five cents a word is also the rate paid by a very successful and widely circulated weekly paper that is published in Philadelphia. What are spoken of as the standard magazines—the reader will probably have in mind three long-established periodicals that bear the names of three distinguished publishing houses, and will have guessed correctly—pay from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five dollars for a short story of five thousand words where the name of the author is of no particular importance. Of course in the case of a writer whose name has an advertising value the reward is far greater. For example, one of the three magazines in question paid the late Paul Leicester Ford one thousand dollars for a Christmas story of about nine thousand words. This was solely for the privilege of publishing the tale in the magazine and had nothing to do with subsequent book rights.

The syndicating of articles and stories has made possible the payment of the most extravagant prices. When, a year ago, it was announced that Peter Finley Dunn was to confine "Mr. Dooley" exclusively to the pages of the American Magazine it was asserted that he was doing so at a loss of fifty thousand dollars a year, fifty thousand dollars being the estimated returns from the utterances of the sage of the Archway Road when they were published in newspapers throughout the country. Before he started for Europe two or three years ago George Ade agreed to write for a syndicate a series of twelve articles in a humorous vein about his impressions. It is said that the stipulated price for this series was ten thousand dollars. Another syndicate is believed to have paid David Graham Phillips a thousand dollars apiece for six short stories. One of the most highly paid of contemporary short story writers—and deservedly so—is the gentleman who writes under the pen name of O. Henry. Yet there was a time, not so long ago, when he was sending some of his very best work to New York from his home in the West and was well satisfied to receive from fifty to seventy-five dollars apiece for his tales.

So much has been said in this paper about ten and fifteen and twenty per cent, royalties, and the inequality, both in the past and in the present, of the profits of the author and the publisher, that perhaps a few lines devoted strictly to shop talk will not be amiss. As has been said, there are in this country ten or a dozen authors whose reputations enable them to stipulate payment on a twenty per cent. basis. That is to say, they receive thirty cents for every copy sold of a novel that is listed at a dollar and a half. At first sight the advantage seems to be still with the publisher. But in most retail places the book is sold at much less than the listed price. From the retailer the publisher has received from seventy-five to eighty cents a copy. After the author's royalty has been deducted there remain a margin of only forty-five or fifty cents. Twenty-five or thirty cents of this go for the cost of producing and advertising the book. Out of the remaining fifteen or twenty cents the publisher must run his business and find his profit. Yet so keen is the competition that in England a twenty-five per cent. royalty is not unheard of. Over there, however, they have a curious custom of a publisher selling books to a retailer by the "baker's dozen;" that is to say, for every dozen books ordered an additional book is thrown in gratis, this thirteenth copy being exempt from royalty.

"Mr. Barnes of New York," which sold more than a million copies and yielded its author a handsome fortune, is said to have been "turned down" by every publishing house in New York before Mr. Gunter decided to bring it out at his own expense. Another celebrated book which met with much the same fate was General Lew Wallace's "Ben Hur." In one respect there is a great similarity between the literary careers of George du Maurier and General Wallace. The first books of each—"Peter Ibbetson" and "The Fair God"—were only mildly successful. The second books—"Trilby" and "Ben Hur"—were the great money winners. The third books—"The Martian" and "The Prince of India"—eagerly awaited and welcomed with a great blare of trumpets, had only their little flutter of ephemeral fame.

It is estimating conservatively that "Ben Hur," from one source or another, is still bringing to the family of its author something in the neighborhood of forty thousand dollars a year. A curious feature of the book has been the uniform steadiness of its sales for twenty years. Seven or eight years ago, when the novel was dramatized, there came a fresh and tremendous stimulus. Yet in the first two or three years after its publication the fate of the story seemed to justify the judgment of those publishers who had refused it. There was no public interest and the book had been practically relegated to the storehouse when, at an age when the average novel of to-day has been entirely forgotten, "Ben Hur" began its long and sensational career as a "big seller." . . .
